

Soils with seasonal high water tables of less than three feet and classified as poorly drained can have limited suitability for roads and buildings due to their potential for groundwater induced flooding.

